Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream was for everyone to have equal rights. He lived through a time where your value was defined by your skin color, and because he was black, he dealt with unequal treatment. Because of this inequality, many people were hurt and angry. King's experiences with prejudice are what inspired him to make a change and fight for fair treatment.

Just like King, I also have a dream. I want to become a doctor and make sure everyone gets equal access to medical treatments. Sadly, our country is built on inequality in many aspects, including healthcare. People who are richer often have their health treatments prioritized, even if others who are not as fortunate are also suffering. My dream is to keep people healthy, and I will fight to make sure everyone receives the care they deserve, no matter who they are or where they come from. King began our fight for equality, but it is far from over. I admire his passion and I hope to use the lessons I have learned from him to make our world a better place for everyone when I grow up.
