Martin Luther King Jr. is one of the most influential people in America that gave his “I have a dream” speech which made America a better place.

Martin Luther King's dream is that his kids would one day live somewhere where they won't be judged by their skin color. He also encouraged his audience to hold the country accountable for freedom, justice, and to also fight against discrimination and equality. His “I Have a Dream Speech”, became one of the most defining moments of the civil rights movement. It was one of the most iconic speeches in American history because it raised awareness and humanity to the national consciousness. King's stance on political activism in a nonviolent way made him a natural leader and an inspirational figure.

One of my aspirations in life is to be a special educational teacher. In order for me to achieve my dream, I need to work hard in school, have good grades, and graduate from college. To do that, I need to pay attention during middle school and high school and do 5 years in college that will help me get a good college degree when I graduate.

Martin Luther King Jr. inspires me because of his humility and with his insistence on a nonviolent approach to activism. I look up to him because of his ability to lead and inspire multiple generations of Americans both during his lifetime and after. I also believe that we should live in a world without discrimination and racism. To believe in others no matter what their background is and to love others and not hate them because in the end, love always wins. There is so much beauty on this Earth and people should not hate each other because of their skin color and where they come from. His speeches and writings allow everyone to continue learning from his beliefs and practices today. Martin Luther helped African Americans access civil rights across the country. King Jr. made America a better place by encouraging people in America to do better in our country.
