Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. tells people in his “I Have a Dream” speech to not judge others by the color of their skin, but to focus on their character. Racism was the focus of Dr. King's speech, but I think that we need to take his message and keep going. These are some of my dreams: I have a dream that one day this country will hold this truth to be self-evident: that all men AND WOMEN are created equal. I have a dream that one day on every playground in America, LGBTQ+kids and straight kids will play together and hold hands on swings. I have a dream that one day every town in the U.S. will be transformed into a safe place for people with mental illness or disabilities. I have a dream that all children will one day live in a nation where they won't be judged by how rich or poor they are but by how honest, kind, and loving they are. I have a dream that one day boys and girls who come from other countries will be able to join hands with white boys and girls and feel like they really belong. I have a dream that one day every school will feel safe, with no practice lockdowns, no school shootings, and gun-free neighborhoods with children playing together on every street and park. I have a dream today.
