Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream helped many people live freely and without segregation. He made people understand that each person is worthy of respect and happiness. In his famous speech, he shared that "[he has] a dream that the country will be an oasis of freedom and justice." To me this means that everyone should be treated equally and live a life of freedom and peace. As a person of color, I have a dream of graduating high school and college. I aspire to be a successful architect. After his work towards removing segregation from the country, every person could receive equal education and opportunities. Thanks to Dr. King, I am able to experience the same opportunities as my other peers, whether they are black, brown, white, etc. He taught me that everyone is equal and that people shouldn't be treated differently because of the color of their skin. Each day I think of his message and try to remind others how important freedom and equality really are. As MLK day comes up, I hope everyone remembers how important it is to treat each other equally, and give thanks for MLK and his work towards freedom for all.
