Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was a powerful civil rights leader. Without him, who knows what kind of injustice the world would have today. King led peaceful protests, boycotts, and marches to express the fact that things needed to change. King wanted everyone to be able to go to the same restaurants, drink at the same water fountains, and King wanted to stop segregation entirely.

Dr. King planned and was in the March on Washington. It took place on August 28, 1963, at which King gave his "I Have A Dream" speech. King's dream was that one day people would not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character. I agree with King, people shouldn't be excluded because of their race, but by the way they act.

I hope that one day Dr. King's dream will be fully achieved. We still have a while to go to meet that goal, but I know that we're making progress. MLK's work won him the Nobel Peace Prize and it persuaded President Lyndon B. Johnson to sign the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 which gave colored people more freedom.

Dr. King's legacy was that everyone, regardless of any differences they may have, are treated equally. MLK's legacy has inspired millions of people to change the way they do things, even the way they live, to eventually get to the point where all people are treated equally. King has certainly inspired me to make a difference. I very much appreciate the fact that King did everything that he did to make a difference in this world. I see King as a civil rights activist who helped to change the world.
